This online inservice explores how formative assessments occurring throughout every day in the classroom impacts student learning. Teachers, instructional coaches, supervisors, and building administrators will examine how formative assessments in classrooms are designed for learning. It is imperative that the assessments are aligned to learning objectives for students. These assessments can then provide the evidence to determine if the instruction that is occurring is having an impact on the learning of all students.

Participants will gain knowledge and skills in:

1. understanding the purpose of assessment and its impact on student learning,
2. aligning formative assessments to student learning objectives (SLOs),
3. engaging in PLC conversations about formative assessments that drive instruction.

This inservice is online from 9:00 a.m. to 12:00 p.m.
