Educators are responsible for empowering students to be autonomous. While educators are challenged to find ways to make learning visible at any time and from any location, it is difficult to find a balance between holding students accountable in a digital arena and preparing students with the ability to succeed in a social and collaborative world. Educators will explore the connection between formative assessments and strong learning targets. Example assessments that can be used to make learning visible anytime, anywhere will be shared during this in person inservice. Time will be provided for a make and take that can be implemented into instructional practice.

Participants will gain knowledge and skills in:

1. exploring the connection between formative assessments and how to make student learning visible anytime, anywhere;
2. designing pupil motivation and metacognition strategies and activities for your students who are engaging;
3. learning how teaching and learning influences can have a direct impact on student achievement and how you can make a concrete impact on student learning without working harder.

This inservice is in person from 9:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m.
