Challenging symptoms of children who experience traumatic events included in the diagnostic criteria for Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD), such as re-experiencing the event, avoiding various reminders, and changes in thoughts and mood, serve to shape expectations of how children may respond to a potentially traumatic event. This in person inservice will discuss the common facts related to trauma, the diversity of “traumatic” events, key factors related to resiliency that can be promoted by professionals, and best practices for developing a trauma-informed classroom. Participants will learn how to promote a physically and psychologically safe environment to foster student growth and help maximize students' academic and social emotional potential.

Participants will gain knowledge and skills in:

1. understanding childhood trauma,
2. realizing how traumatic events can influence students' mood, behavior, and functioning within the classroom,
3. implementing strategies to develop trauma-informed classrooms/schools.

This inservice is in person from 9:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m.
